3C Passage | 26〜30

Sharing Useful Things

Last spring, Cedar Town Library started a new service called the Library of Things. People can borrow useful objects, not only books. The library has tools, board games, small tents, and cooking equipment. Library worker Nina Park got the idea after she learned that many families bought things they used only once or twice.

At first, some people worried that the objects would come back broken. Nina made simple rules. Adults must show a library card, and some objects can be borrowed for only three days. Before taking an object home, users check it with a library worker. When they return it, the worker checks it again.

The service soon became popular. Mr. Gomez borrowed a tent for his daughter’s first camping trip. He did not want to buy one before knowing whether she liked camping. A cooking club borrowed a large cake pan for a town event. Students also use the board games during rainy weekends.

The library now plans to add sports equipment. Nina asks users to write down what they want the library to buy next. She says the service saves money, reduces waste, and gives neighbors another reason to visit the library.
