Passage A A Calmer School Lunch

At North Valley High School, many students used to avoid the cafeteria. The room had hard floors and walls, so ordinary conversations produced a great deal of noise. Some students ate as quickly as possible and left, while others chose to eat alone outside. After receiving several complaints, the school measured the sound level during lunch. The results showed that (18).

The school could not rebuild the cafeteria, but it made several smaller changes. Soft panels were placed on parts of the walls, and rubber covers were added to chair legs. The room was also divided into two areas: one for normal conversation and another where students were asked to speak quietly. Together, these changes reduced unnecessary sound, and (19).

Teachers first worried that the quiet area would be difficult to manage. However, students helped create simple signs and reminded one another of the rules. The school also asks students for comments every month and changes the seating arrangement when necessary. The project shows that (20). Even limited changes can improve a shared space when users take part in planning and maintaining it.

1 students wanted longer science lessons	2 the cafeteria was louder than the school had expected
3 the school needed to serve more expensive food	4 most chairs had disappeared

(19)

1 the cafeteria stopped serving lunch	2 teachers removed every table
3 students had to eat outdoors	4 more students began to stay and enjoy their meals

1 small improvements work better with student cooperation	2 cafeterias should never allow conversation
3 only new buildings can solve noise problems	4 monthly surveys always cost too much

Passage B Sports Lockers for Everyone

Many people would like to exercise in public parks, but buying equipment can be expensive. In Lakewood, the city has installed several sports lockers near popular parks. Residents use a free phone app to open a locker and borrow a ball, a jump rope, or a set of exercise bands. Because the items can be returned to any locker in the system, (21).

The program began with donated equipment, but the city soon discovered a problem. Some items were returned damaged, while others were left wet after rain. The app now asks users to report an item's condition before and after borrowing it. Local sports clubs also inspect the lockers once a week. As a result, (22), and repairs can be arranged more quickly.

The lockers do more than provide equipment. On Saturday mornings, volunteer coaches offer short lessons beside two of the parks. Beginners can learn how to use exercise bands safely or join simple ball games. The city plans to add lockers in other neighborhoods, but it will first study how often each item is borrowed. This information matters because (23). A successful program must offer equipment that local residents will actually use.

1 every resident must own a smartphone	2 parks can close their walking paths
3 users do not need to return to the place where they started	4 the city can sell all donated items

1 rain can no longer reach the parks	2 staff receive better information about equipment problems
3 all equipment is replaced every week	4 users are allowed to keep damaged items

(23)

1 volunteer coaches must be paid by app users	2 exercise bands can only be used in winter
3 all parks have exactly the same visitors	4 different neighborhoods may need different kinds of equipment
