[1] Many high schools sell drinks in plastic bottles. At Aoba High School, the environmental club noticed that hundreds of empty bottles were thrown away each week. The members suggested installing water refill stations and giving every new student a reusable bottle.

[2] The stations brought several benefits. Students could get cold water for free, so they spent less money on drinks. The machines also counted how many bottles were saved. The club shared these numbers each month, which helped more students understand the effect of their choices.

[3] However, the project required careful management. The stations had to be cleaned regularly, and long lines sometimes formed during lunch breaks. Some students also forgot their reusable bottles. The school therefore changed the cleaning schedule and placed reminder signs near the cafeteria.
