A Fridge That Shares

[1] In many towns, a surprising amount of good food is thrown away every day. Restaurants cook more than they sell, and families often buy more than they can eat. In a small city called Hinode, a group of residents decided to do something about this problem. In 2022, they set up a "community fridge" — a large refrigerator placed in a public space where anyone can leave food or take it for free.

[2] The idea was simple, but making it work was not. The volunteers had to find a safe location, pay for the electricity, and follow strict rules about food safety. They could not accept home-cooked dishes or anything past its expiry date. At first, some neighbors worried that the fridge would attract trouble or that only certain people would use it. To reduce these concerns, the group held meetings and explained that the fridge was open to everyone, regardless of income.

[3] Slowly, attitudes began to change. Local bakeries started leaving unsold bread each evening, and a nearby farm donated vegetables that were perfectly fresh but too oddly shaped to sell in stores. Students from the local high school created a simple chart so users could see what kind of food was needed most. Within a year, the fridge was helping dozens of households a week, and the amount of food wasted in the area fell noticeably.

[4] What surprised the volunteers most was not the drop in waste, but the sense of connection the project created. People who had never spoken before began chatting beside the fridge. For the residents of Hinode, the refrigerator became more than a way to save food. It became a quiet reminder that small, shared actions can solve problems that once seemed too big for any single person to handle.

Step 4 Comprehension ｜根拠を探そう（18 分）

1. Why did the residents of Hinode set up a community fridge?

A. Because the city government asked them to reduce electricity use.
B. Because a lot of good food in the town was being thrown away.
C. Because local restaurants wanted to sell more meals.
D. Because families in the town did not have enough refrigerators.

2. Which of the following could NOT be left in the fridge?

A. Fresh vegetables from a local farm.
B. Unsold bread from a bakery.
C. A home-cooked dish made by a neighbor.
D. Packaged food before its expiry date.

3. Why were some neighbors worried at first?

A. They thought the fridge would use too much electricity.
B. They feared it would cause trouble or be used by only some people.
C. They believed the food would not be fresh enough.
D. They wanted the fridge to be placed in a private home.

4. In paragraph 3, the word "oddly" is closest in meaning to

A. strangely
B. quickly
C. cheaply
D. carefully

5. What surprised the volunteers most about the project?

A. How much money the fridge saved the city.
B. How quickly the high school students finished the chart.
C. The new connections that formed between people.
D. The number of bakeries that joined in one year.

6. What is the main message of the passage?

A. Community fridges are the cheapest way to store food safely.
B. Small shared actions by ordinary people can solve large problems.
C. Food waste can only be reduced by changing government rules.
D. Volunteers should focus on saving money rather than building ties.

Step 5 Organize & Respond ｜整理して使おう（10 分）
